the greatest fears i had during my grieving was that i was losing control going crazy and might make decisions that would harm me my family and my friends this included suicidal thoughts which scared the hell out of me i was desperate to find answers quickly i found those answers would be hard to find as resources for widowers are minimal and often of dubious value in widower to widower i ve compiled the most vital information i could find on the widower experience into one book so the reader does not have to search as hard as i had to do i include many critical issues not addressed in other publications this can be raw and brutal at times much like the grieving process itself widower to widower is woven around blogs i wrote during and after my wife s passing this storytelling element allows the reader to be in the moment with me during the grieving experience and to see that their own experience is not uncommon as i ve learned from hundreds of fellow widowers mine was not a unique journey but was similar in many respects to their journey as well i am the expert only on my own experience each widower s experience is unique but there are common threads and shared experiences we must each find our own path while learning what we can from each other this second edition includes 60 additional pages of research insights resources and a men s grief group guide reader testimonies are included in the first two pages of this 2nd edition for more information go to fredcolby.com
