Paulding Farnham 2000-11 according to paul ormerod author of the bestselling butterfly economics and why most things fail the mechanistic viewpoint of conventional economics is drastically limited because it cannot comprehend the vital nature of networks as our societies become ever more dynamic and intertwined network effects on every level are increasingly profound nudge theory is popular but only part of the answer to grapple successfully with the current financial crisis businesses and politicians need to grasp the perils and possibilities of positive linking our social and economic worlds have been revolutionised by a massive increase in our awareness of the choices decisions behaviours and opinions of other people for the first time in human history more than half of us live in cities and this combined with the internet has transformed communications network effects the fact that a person can and often does decide to change his or her behaviour simply on the basis of copying what others do pervade the modern world as ormerod shows network effects make conventional approaches to policy whether in the public or corporate sectors much more likely to fail but they open up the possibility of truly positive linking of more subtle effective and successful policies ones which harness our knowledge of network effects and how they work in practice

Snippets of Paul Gascoigne 2014-09-10 this book examines one of the most high profile municipal privatizations the privatization of new york city s central park the fiscal crisis of the 1970s established the political and cultural opening for privatizations which were justified on the basis of increasing efficiency however as cooke demonstrates these justifications were deliberately blind to the social and economic implication of privatization this fascinating account moves beyond the hackneyed pro versus anti privatization debate by reconceptualizing the park s privatization as an ensemble of contradictory class effects it also highlights the immense theoretical and policy space for radically reconsidering and rethinking privatization processes in both the municipal and global contexts
